Approach and construction

Throughout the development of the Maguire Boats Exocet we have strived to develop a moth that is lightweight, strong and as durable as we can make it, by using high quality materials, careful construction techniques and rigorous testing.

We have selected the best materials possible for the hull and foil construction, we use high modulus fibres in areas of highest load and stress. Especially in the foils.

During construction we cure both hull and foils in an oven at a temperature of 75 degrees for 6 hours this complete posture cycle and ensures we get the best properties possible from our carbon laminates.

The boat has been constructed to ensure it remains a lightweight composite structure to an acceptably competitive weight tolerance.
