POPULIST BREXIT BRITAIN!

The Populists seek a Brexit Britain that rejects both the dog-eat-dog uncaring Thatcherite right and the wild-eyed hard left. Both are based upon textbook crank theories that ignore the real needs of ordinary people. Needs such as job security, fair wages, just prices, affordable housing, freedom from crime and the fear of crime, and the right to free speech without loss of livelihood or (at worst) imprisonment.

Current mainstream politicians condemn "Populists" yet governments since the mid 1960s have been pushing an extreme agenda that breaks down communities, which leads to loss of national identity and takes away personal and national independence.

How can this be reversed? We need to give people back their pride. Give them a stake in society, through co-operative ownership in business, worker participation with managers of industry, and rewards for loyalty. It means policies to help people to buy locally from small business, to stop monopolies and the clone town mentality where all high streets become increasingly the same.

We need to conserve what matters to people, be it our local pub, our hospital, our school or corner shop. Our heritage is under threat - be it the green belt or historic buildings from the bulldozers of the greedy developers. Once it has been destroyed it can never return. The so-called "Conservative" Party fails to conserve anything except the wealth of its backers.

That also applies to identity. The hostility towards traditional values by the elite has led to society breaking down and social order being unsettled. The fear of being condemned as prejudiced has meant a decline in our traditional way of life.

The Populist Glossary

We publish another in a short series of definitions which, we hope, will enable Populists and Nationalists to have a clearer understanding of those words and expressions which turn up in written articles, social medium forums and the general conversation of radicals.

PART TWO

CULTURE

Human progress and individual contentment rests on the stability of a sound culture geared to the traditional mores of the society. Thus, destroying or seriously injuring a racial or national culture is a crime against the injured people. Culture "lives" from generation to generation, either growing in refinement and potential due to isolation or regressing because of Cultural Marxism. Internationalism seeks to destroy all human individuality and national cultures, replacing them with a formless, pornographic cacophony of junk and filth, such as "modern art", the obscene noise which is described as "music" by the press and similar international barbarities. No people can be free when their culture is under attack; thus the destruction of all national cultures is an essential part of the communist/capitalist/Zionist conspiracy to destroy all middle class values, concurrently reducing it to slavery.

DEMOCRACY

Usually the capitalist political system. It is controlled by capitalist ownership and control of the media, grants from tax-free foundations, contributions and favourable press coverage for favoured political candidates. Wide franchise to vote is given to the people to make them easier to control by making them think that "the people" are responsible for the inevitable distortions and negative consequences of the policies of the super-rich matroids which are imposed in order to serve their selfish interests. Democracy separates authority from responsibility, thus making it virtually impossible for the voters to reform the system. Those in authority (the matroids) have no responsibility. Those responsible (the politicians) have no authority except that which is lent to them by their controllers.

FOREIGN POLICY

To be worthy of the name, it must be conducted only from the standpoint of national interest, not the interest of minority, special interest pressure groups. In foreign policy, the issue is between nationalism and internationalism, not "conservatism vs liberalism" as "conservative leaders" pretend to believe. There is no such thing as a "conservative" foreign policy or a "liberal" foreign policy. Mislabelling foreign policy issues as "conservative" or "liberal" hides the real issue and contributes the confusion in the area of foreign policy desired by the mattoid capitalists, making it easy for them to attain their selfish objectives without exposure.

FREE ENTERPRISE

Economic intercourse free of government interference except when it tends toward monopoly, when law is used to re-establish competition. Except for regulated public utilities, no business is permitted to dominate the market. Protection by tariff from foreign invasion of domestic markets with low-price manufactured goods and protection by strict immigration laws from invasion of low-cost labour is an essential part of the system. Absentee ownership of farms prohibited; farms kept in the hands of families, even if "inefficient" by capitalist standards.

People, not profits, come first.

Kick 'em out in 2020.

This is the system that people vote for when they vote Conservative or Labour.

You loyally work for a multinational business, and then suddenly they announce job losses. But you, in your workplace have done nothing wrong.

And the company decides to relocate, meaning you have to make the decision to either up sticks and move with them or "make yourself redundant" by not following the company to its new location. Thus, your family, your friends are affected, but the business never has to explain itself to you, as you are a mere economic unit . . .

A small-scale distributist system, with co-operative ownership of the larger enterprises in which all workers own a share (that cannot be sold off, unlike the fake property owning of Thatcherism) would be the cure for this.

Our task is to separate "Conservatism" (conservative social values, tradition, personal liberty and national independence) from the Capitalist economic system.

We need to be ruthless in exposing the global free market as we are in fighting Cultural Marxism. Both are extremist belief systems.

Our key demographic are the people who never benefit from Capitalism, yet hate the social leftism that comes as the package when voting Labour. These people voted for Brexit and are heavily skewed toward the C12DE social classes.

POPULISM

Gives You What You Want When You Want It

WHAT IS POPULISM?

Populism is the political creed which draws its beliefs from the *will of the people

Populists form policies from a background of support for family, community and tradition. We distrust politicians and manifestoes. We prefer a policy based upon unchanging principles. That is why our statement of beliefs is called Populist Principles.

Populism is for all classes and backgrounds and puts people before politics. Our hero is the small man standing up to the big forces in society - be they bureaucrats, big business or mass unions.

Those who struggle against all the odds - the housewife making ends meet on a pittance; the shopkeeper threatened by supermarkets and department stores, and those who save lives such as firemen, police officers and doctors. They are the real heroes - often unsung and underpaid - but more worthy than the 'celebrities' and 'high flyers' who become the false idols revered by the media.

Populism is best illustrated by the films of Frank Capra and the books of George Orwell.

Welcome to Populism!

POPULISM AND THE FAMILY

FAMILIES FIRST!

The family is the bedrock of society. It is the glue which binds us together and separates us from the animal kingdom.

Populists make no apology for supporting the institution of marriage as the best and time honoured way of domestic life. Where attacks occur upon marriage and the traditional family values occur within the mass media (especially television) we oppose them. Instead of the hostility fostered by feminists there should be partnership between men and women. United we stand - divided we fall.

But, when couples break up, fathers should be entitled to and expect to maintain contact with their children. The children are the future and need to know that they are loved by both parents in a stable environment. Populists will take any action necessary to protect children from perverts who would corrupt and harm them.

Populist economic policies are designed to reduce much of the financial strain upon marriages by reducing the potential for debt and providing a taxation system which favours married parents.

Where single parent mother tenants face isolation and childcare problems we favour imaginative housing policies to bring them together under one roof and create a more constructive environment. Families do not need a heavy handed local council looking for problems where there are none, by sending in armies of social workers and health visitors. By building an extended family (of grandparents, aunts and uncles and neighbours) parents may solve some problems and prevent others.

Poverty and crime have been linked to family breakdown in studies and surveys for many years. Only by putting families first can we ever solve such problems and provide a better future for our children.

THE LEADER'S ARTICLE

Russell White, Leader of the Populist Party, gives a concise and direct justification of Localism. Followed by a few thoughts on UKIP's terminal decline.

RUSSELL WHITE

Populist Party Leader

Why we need Localism!

Localism works for ordinary people. Decentralisation is best for those most vulnerable.

Here are a few examples:-

- 1 A family moves from one location to another to ensure a better education for their child or to ensure their child isn't the only indigenous child in the class. Then the local council decides to close the two schools, and merge them into one. The family is back to square one, due to centralisation.
- 2 Two libraries exist. One in the West of town, and the other in the East. Mrs Groggins is frail and cannot get out much, but she can pop to the library in the West as it is very near to her. But the council decides to merge the two libraries as part of their "efficiency" plan. Now Mrs Groggins has to get a bus to reach the central library, but the bus stop is too far to walk to so she rarely goes there.
- 3 Many local railway stations served local communities up until the 1960s. Though they were "loss making" they did provide transport for those without cars. Then, in the 1960s the governments gave Dr Beeching the thankless task of deciding which to keep and which to close. His name became reviled in rural England for decades afterwards, though the people who hatched the plan remained anonymous.
- 4 Hospitals: Centralisation means that local people have to travel further for routine treatment. And if there is a "hospital bug" more patients are affected.
- 5 Fire service: I'd rather not wait for the fire brigade to travel miles while I wait for them to put out the blaze. Local fire stations mean they can reach you more quickly.

Why do UKIP councillors keep Defecting to the Tories?

I have seen enough of these defections by now to have time to think it over. My view is that UKIP went for rapid growth by having a very broad outline of what the party believed in.

So UKIP focussed around several key issues:-

- Brexit and the Economy
- Immigration

EXCERPTS FROM THE DIARY OF AN EDWARDIAN TIME TRAVELLER

Dear Diary . . .

15th January 2018.

I have noticed a large number of young adolescents with hair colours that are pink or green or other unnatural colours. When I suggest that they visit their local general practitioner they laugh at me. Why would someone with a disorder like this not wish for a cure?

16th January 2018.

I have always believed it prudent to have on my person at all times a needle and thread for sartorial emergencies, (perhaps a loose button?). Today, I offered to stitch the blue trouser garment known as "jeans" for a young fellow which had deteriorated at the knee. The brute swore at me and said that they are "meant to be like that". The poverty and moral degradation charted by Charles Booth in the East End of London seems to have spread nationally.

17th January 2018.

I have seen two young men providing mouth to mouth resuscitation to one another, yet neither was unconscious. I remained vexed by this . . . they surely cannot be mollies can they - in full view of the populace?

18th January 2018.

A garment proclaims "Punx not dead". One wonders who Punx was, and how he escaped his demise . . .

19th January 2018.

I fear that I have trespassed into the abyss. All manner of horrors can be seen within a box powered by electricity, known as "TV" . . .

20th January 2018.

I return to my own time, despondent and dispirited. I will dismantle the time machine so no other mortal may witness what I have over my short excursion into the future. May God have mercy on us!

Waiting for Bob . . .

There was once a politician called Bob. Now Bob had achieved amazing successes in his political career. Many people admired him.

But Bob walked away from his party at the final furlong. So the political party, the Purple Party, that Bob led so well had to find a new leader. That was Walter. Walter didn't have the charisma and charm of Bob, making up stories about his achievements, and he lasted only six months, during which time the Purple Party floundered at the polls.

Pretty soon there was an election for a new leader. One of the front runners, Les, wasn't to Bob's liking, so Bob and a number of his close colleagues said, "If Les wins we'll resign en masse" . . .

This was meant to stop Les in his tracks, yet Les continued as favourite to win the leadership. Meanwhile Bob was quoted as saying he would start a new party if Les won.

He then insisted that he was misquoted and that he would not start a new party. Bob's supporters were confused. They wanted Bob, rather than Les, and were hanging on Bob's every word. So Bob told them to vote for his friend Jack. And Jack won by a very narrow margin. Les and his followers left the Purple Party instead and formed the Mauve Party. Bob went on to fame and fortune in the media hosting his own chat show.

Jack wasn't very good; he was worse than Walter. The Bob-ites became very angry and Jack was sacked. Jack then left to form the Invisible Party, but no one joined. Jack was replaced by Billy. But Bob said he didn't like Billy and his policies. The Purple Party continued its decline.

Years passed and Bob procrastinated. "Maybe I'll come back, one day" he said. Bob's supporters waited . . . and waited . . . and waited . . .

Other parties with similar or even better patriotic policies came and went during this time and the country got worse and worse, until it was unrecognisable across the land. These parties should have picked up thousands of new members and gained seats in Parliament, if given a chance. But people waited for Bob, and by the time they had stopped waiting there was nothing left worth saving . . .

Bob emigrated and became a popular after dinner speaker. END.

- Anti-Global Warming
- Grammar Schools
- Opposition to Same Sex Marriage

A further analysis reveals how this ties in with the defections.

- Brexit and the Economy.

The UKIP version of Brexit is centred around global free trade. This is more or less identical to the position held by Tories like Dan Hannan, Michael Gove and Boris Johnson. The "Labour Leave" version is more sympathetic to protectionism, as it centres around preventing undercutting by Third World economies post-Brexit. The Red-KIP element in UKIP was suppressed, but as the Blue-Kippers defect their influence may grow.

For a UKIP councillor defecting to the Tories it is a relatively easy jump, as the party regularly invited representatives from the Bruges Group, Adam Smith Institute, Freedom Association, to speak at its meetings and put the globalist Tory version of Brexit to UKIP delegates at conferences. This narrowed the clear blue water between UKIP and the Tories.

On the wider economy, UKIP made noises about buccaneering entrepreneurship, about burning up EU regulations (whether they were beneficial to our working class or not), and about opposing the Working Time Directive and other "red tape" and worker protection. At every turn UKIP positioned itself as the party of the employers, rather than the workers (or a national unity compromise between the two poles). This distanced UKIP from possible support from Labour (and Liberal) Leave voters, making a breakthrough harder in Labour constituencies. And yet, the party had some of their best results in places like Sunderland, Hartlepool, etc. in the North, and Labour leaning Midlands seats even with this emphasis.

Any talk of monetary reform (Bradbury Pound), or combating the multinationals, and taking back the foreign owned utilities back into British hands was dismissed as "Socialism". And those who concurred with this view were pushed to the fore, while redkippers were held back.

- Immigration.

UKIP focussed upon immigration but failed to connect it to the demand of big business for cheap labour. This made it look like they were blaming the immigrants for coming here, rather than the businesses that enticed them over, and the political parties that receive the funding to do their bidding. A missed opportunity.

Lee Consterdine, Populist Party National Chairman, gives his Annual Review of Populist Party activities for 2017

THAT WAS THE YEAR THAT WAS OUR BEST EVER YET

There is no question that 2017 has proved to be the Populist Party's most productive and, in one sense, most successful year.

It is very pleasing to report that the Populist Party acquired more new members, 26 in total, than in any previous year of our existence. In effect, we doubled our membership size during 2017. The membership renewal rate was very healthy as well.

A significant boost came during April with the defection of a number of [now former] UKIP members in Sunderland. Given the number of new members who came across, bringing with them a wealth of experience and enthusiasm, the Populist Party was in a position to form our first viable branch. For the time being their finances are linked directly to Populist Central Accounts.

April 2017 was our best month for recruiting members, gaining 8 in total.

As far as politics is concerned generally, 2017 will stand out as the year Prime Minister May decided, rather recklessly, to call a very premature General Election. How did this play out for the Populist Party? The original plan had been to nurse what would have been the new constituency of Beckenham, post Boundary Commission changes, for what should have been the 2020 General Election. As it was we were unprepared and were rushed into contesting the current Lewisham West and Penge Parliamentary Constituency. Given that this constituency was in the bottom 50 in the Party's list of all 650 Parliamentary prospects and given a surge in votes for the Labour candidate, we don't regard our candidate's score of 50 votes [0.1%] as being particularly bad. Indeed, given we have taken the plunge, we as a Party are now able to look detractors straight in the eye and say: "we've done it. When are you going to?"

The continuing task for the Populist Party is to capitalise upon these developments but also the woes of UKIP and its ongoing loss of purpose (and members) since the Brexit vote of 2016.

In addition to all the above the focus during 2017 for the Populist Party has been to continue our promotion on Facebook, using our various pages. The Populist Party a number of pages designed to promote the policies and activities of the Party. The Party Leader, Russell White, has been tireless in the respect of this promotion. And with enthusiastic support from other Populists it is pleasing to report positive results.

Indeed, in terms of acquiring new members, Facebook continues to be the Populist Party's best source to date, by a huge margin.

Worse still, UKIP accepted Commonwealth immigration whilst rejecting EU immigration. Again, a mistake, as the grooming gangs that UKIP railed against (taking up the baton from the BNP's earlier exposure) are clearly of Commonwealth origin.

- Anti-Global Warming.

How to destroy the party's chances with environmentalists in one easy step - bring in people like Roger Helmer to argue against anything "green" and to support fracking . . . Environmentalism is "conservative", consumerism is "liberal".

- GrammarSchools.

A strong policy, but so identified with the Tories, that UKIP cannot use it to create a separate identity from them.

- Same Sex Marriage.

UKIP tied itself in knots over this by stating that they opposed it (rather than simply having a "free vote" on it, in the knowledge that 90+% of their members would probably vote against it). This was understandable, given that David Cameron had made legalisation a Tory policy, decided in Parliament, rather than by referendum, but once the vote went through, with thousands of new members for UKIP, the party decided to "abide by the result" rather than calling for a referendum to at least decide the issue of conscience via popular consent. UKIP should have used this as a chance to flex its muscles in favour of putting all issues of conscience to a popular vote. Instead, it made a big fuss and then backed down when challenged. And with a change of leader - May for Cameron - and the Brexit vote, many of these Cameron loathing former Tories will have returned to the Fold, tail between their legs, because they only joined UKIP in a fit of pique about legalising same sex marriage, and the UKIP failed to follow through (perhaps fearing defeat in a referendum) . . .

THE POPULIST SPECTRUM

The Populist Spectrum consists of 4 basic types of Populist thinking; that is, the Classical, the Conservative, the Reformist and the Radical Populist.

The Classical is the small man resenting the big forces. He supports referenda, protectionism, and small-scale living. Classicists are neutralist in foreign affairs, tending to wish their country to keep out of foreign entanglements.

Conservative Populists focus upon tradition - the preservation of heritage, culture and faith. This social conservatism is the real type, which existed before free market dogma triumphed. Conservative Populism is often Christian and therefore Sunday trading and the national lottery would be opposed.

Reformist Populists are the moderates who wish to arrive at Populism at a slower rate. Most "isms" have their moderates, and Populism is no exception. Reformists are concerned about the nanny state and political correctness, disturbed by the antagonism towards motorists and smokers by the political elite. They wish to live their lives without excessive interference and taxation by the big hand of government.

Radical Populists favour a root-and-branch assault upon modernism, consumerism and globalisation. They are often anti-American and favour a 'back to the land' model of society. Radical Populists may count the French anti-McDonald's campaigner Jose Bove, and the Luddites as amongst their heroes.

All four types are interdependent and elements of each will exist in most populist-minded people. A pro-motorist/pro-US reformist and an anti-car/anti-US Radical can exist within the same tradition because all four types are bound together by the concepts of community values - as opposed to selfish individualism; national identity; national independence and traditional family values. This is regardless of which country or region we speak of.

A DECLARATION

To the Houses of Parliament

(House of Commons and House of Lords)

by

The Sovereign People of the United Kingdom

"The right to revolution – whenever the Legislators endeavour to take away, and destroy the Property of the People.....they put themselves into a state of war with the People by this breach of Trust they forfeit the Power, the People had put into their hands, for quite contrary ends, and it devolves to the People, who have a Right to resume the original Liberty"
(Locke, Two Treaties of Government)

WE, the undersigned Sovereign People of the United Kingdom, do declare that to transfer the sovereignty and powers of the United Kingdom Electorate to a foreign country or entity, without the declared assent of the United Kingdom Electorate is a breach of the Constitutional law and illegal. If all these sovereign powers are not repatriated to the United Kingdom, then those responsible for those illegal acts are accountable to the Electorate.

1. The Electorate of the United Kingdom is Sovereign.
2. The United Kingdom Electorate has delegated to the Crown and Parliament sovereign powers at dates of election, to enable them to administer the affairs of the state internally.
3. It is NOT within the gift of the Crown and Parliament to transfer all or any of these powers, so delegated, to a foreign country or entity, and in doing so, externally. This is clearly forbidden by the laws of the Constitution.
4. Parliament is subject to change by the Electorate at election dates.
5. The Transfer of Sovereignty and powers to a foreign country or entity without the clear assent of the Electorate is unconstitutional and illegal. If those sovereign powers, in part or in whole, are not repatriated to the United Kingdom, then those responsible should be held accountable as being party to a breach of the Constitution and the law relating thereto.

This Declaration must now be contained within our uncoded Constitution to confirm that Parliament has not had ever, nor at any future time will have, the power to transfer or give away the Sovereignty of the United Kingdom to a foreign country or entity without the assent of the Electorate by way of a Referendum specifically set up for that purpose.

Members of Parliament are chosen by the Electorate to represent them within the House of Commons. To decide upon internal matters of state, if the Electorate should disagree then they are able to change Parliament at a future election date. Parliament is not given carte blanche in all matters of decisions in respect of our Sovereignty.

A Referendum was held in June, 2016 regarding whether the Electorate wished to remain or leave the EU. The majority of the Electorate decided to have full Sovereignty returned to the United Kingdom and in order to facilitate this, the current Government must arrange for the United Kingdom to leave the EU in its entirety.

A remarkable achievement for the Populist Party. Insofar ours is the Populist-Nationalist party who achieved the best result of the whole night. At 414 votes and 13.2%, the Populist Party Shiney Row Ward result is better than any other local election result. It's very strange that no one else has deigned to notice this.
