What Are Schwartz Rounds?

Schwartz Rounds are confidential facilitated group spaces that enable healthcare staff and/or students to hear and share stories of the emotional, ethical and social impact of work on them, providing a safe space for reflection for all staff and students working in healthcare.

Rounds at the University of Surrey

University of Surrey has been running Schwartz Rounds since 2019 as a facilitated peer support space for students, and we would now like to invite newly qualified NHS staff (who may have graduated from Surrey or elsewhere) and those new to the NMC/HCPC Register, in to our Rounds. Rounds run monthly (mostly online) and provide a safe psychological space to process emotions and reduce feelings of isolation when facing difficulties in practice, facilitate reflective practice and improve wellbeing and retention.

Good way to process and share difficult things

There really aren't enough spaces which centre experience and feelings like how Schwartz Rounds do

Brilliant way to realise everyone is having the same experiences and the same fears

Makes people more open and have courage to share thoughts and feelings

Supporting your Professional Journey

As you transition to being a newly qualified professional, the Rounds at the University of Surrey are available to you, to help you bridge the gap between your student and practitioner identities. Our Rounds are also available to any internationally qualified staff who have started working in the UK within the last two years. Whether you have experienced Rounds before or are new to them, you are warmly invited to attend our Rounds; a safe space for you to share your experiences.
